The GPSMAP 66i is Garmin's top-of-the-line handheld GPS unit with InReach satellite communications built-in. It's a solid device built for outdoor use and navigation. I've logged months of testing and use for this Garmin GPSMAP 66i review, and while it's a solid unit, it's also probably not for everyone.

Garmin GPSMAP 66i Review - HikingGuy.com

The GPSMAP 66i is built on the proven GPSMAP system of GPS handhelds. It uses Garmin's system of device integration and coordination. It is the first InReach to completely break free from the original DeLorme system after Garmin took over. Read the GPSMAP 66st manual online for a full understanding of all that this system will do.

The Montana 750i, 700i, and 700 are one of the only Garmin handheld GPS units that are MIL-STD-810 certified (right now). In layman's terms, it means the GPS is not only water-resistant, but also can survive in temperature extremes, can withstand shock, vibration, dust, and is generally indestructible.
